

I met with Rachel to talk over the wombat website. We agreed that the overall aesthetic is successful. The bright colors and photos and sans serif typeface make the page feel friendly and professional. The navigation tool at the top is also successful and accessible. We also agreed that the proportions of the page need to be reconsidered so that photos and text don't get cut off unintentionally. The text treatment could be improved with a larger text size. Also, the colors of the type are low contrast and difficult to read against the photos and white background.
